I am a Delmarva Power customer. I fully support Bluewater Wind's offshore project. I demand that Delmarva Power drop its opposition. If the project is not approved, I will support re-regulating power generation and putting an end to Delmarva Power's tight-fisted control over Delaware's energy future.

Given the volume of positive public input on this subject matter to you at the PSC and to newspaper editorial pages, the probability is that offshore wind power, regardless of a $5 to $20 increase in monthly cost, would be acceptable and endorsed by a majority of informed consumers.

While Delmarva Power continues to publicize fear of significant price increases and their lobbyist and staff work the members of the General Assembly, commissioners please continue to consider us consumers who want clean, renewable energy sources for our electric power and having the means at our disposal rather than voiding our informed opinion.

Questioning ourselves

Turn all the electricity off on a community basis. See how you like living without it. We all will experience power outages sooner or later and sometimes hurricanes or more, and, if World War III breaks out, you will wish you had a windmill and solar panels or get used to camping out. Ever hear of Windmill Road in Millville?

There was a windmill there up until about three years ago.

There's another very large windmill on Route 17 near Seelyville. How did these get built without an ordinance? Or is there

Questioning our wind

As a member of the Citizens for Clean Power, I take issue with the headline used in Richard MacArthur's article; "Move to

We must control our power

It is obvious that the friends of Delmarva Power are in the grip of an agenda to allow Delmarva to control us in their noncompetitive supply of electricity to us given to them by our Legislature. To the wind power will not mean that grid, but we need to do exactly that to prevent them from exploiting their control of costs to us (because the Legislature doesn't know how to do it) - and to keep them from getting more entrenched into that abuse of our dependency on them.

Wind power has been proven to work; even if it costs more to institute it, the cost will be far more controlled from then on because the cost of the source of the power (wind) will not go up as it inexorably will if it is gas or oil. We need to be free of the power that foreign oil has over us. We must get rid of it. So, the only true path that will get us to our objectives is to go toward wind power - not toward the wind of politicians spouting support for our windmills, not hot air.

The Legislature has erred in giving Delmarva the power that it has, it can correct it by telling them to get off their backs and get with it or get out.

Commissioner's decision

Everyday we are inundated with "news" about wind power that is, in my opinion, meant to misrepresent, detract from, and sabotage an extremely clean source of electricity power. Case in point; the headline of Sunday's News Journal, (Oct. 20) "Wind Backup Pollutes," and Backup Pollutes, say Experts.

Of course wind backup pollutes. Why do you think the state voted for a wind farm? Certainly not for its backup. The alternatives all pollute - even more so than just the backup. Are the experts

MEMORANDUM
TO: The Honorable
FROM: [Redacted]
SUBJECT: [Redacted]
The memorandum was sent to the Commission with a copy submitted to the Cape Gazette for publication.

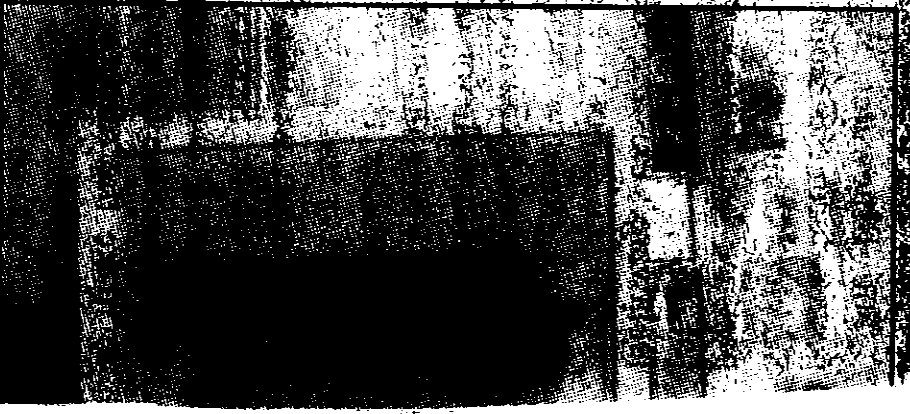

Those of us who have followed the course of the subject Delaware REP are not being confused by the efforts of Delaware Power to portray an unjustifiable increase to consumers if the company is required to compete in contact with Bluewater Wind for clean, renewable, electric power from an offshore location. If only the business leaders of Delaware Power and the past General Assembly that allowed for the accumulated near 50 percent increase in costs had been so considerate of the consumer.

The real issue(s) regarding the construction of offshore wind turbines is out of the grasp of most Delaware Power customers, as power and politics once again work behind the scene to conclude what is best for the consumer.

It is unfortunate that the two primary sources of offshore wind turbine construction, and the related capital cost increase passed to the consumer, are not subject to binding public review.

Re: PSC Dockets No. 06-241 and 07-20

Dear Ladies and Gentlemen:

Today's News Journal newspaper indicates that the Public Service Commission of Delaware "is accepting public comments about the proposed wind farm, and a state report calling it too expensive, until Monday [November 12, 2007]."¹

Over the past few days, we have been receiving a significant number of written comments from members of the public expressing their grave concern about the wind farm project which I think the Commission and the State Agencies should become aware of as they continue their review and deliberation of that project.

Accordingly, I attach copies of those letters for filing with the Commission and the State Agencies so that they may consider this filing as part of the public record during their deliberations in these dockets. Since the current review process is not typical, I am using this approach, which is a reasonable one, as the most effective way at this stage to bring this important input from the public to your collective attention. I think it is crucial
